Gulf Breeze II FLD984170340 Preliminary Assessment

Site Description. On 10/21/88, a 55-gallon drum containing unknown materials was discovered by the US Coast Guard at Fort Walton Beach, in Okaloosa County, Florida[1]. The exact location of the drum is unknown.

Description of Hazardous Conditions, Incidents and Permit Violations. On the day in which the drum was discovered, a contractor was hired to sample the drum's contents, and the drum was removed[1]. No additional information is available in files maintained by the Site Assessment or Emergency Response and Control Sections of EPA[2], or the CERCLA Site Screening and Emergency Response Sections of FDER.

RCRA_Status. The site has no RCRA status.

Nature of Hazardous Materials. Results of the sample analysis conducted at the time of the drum removal are unknown[1,2].

Potentially Affected Population and Resources. Surface water is the only probable route of contamination. Ground-water is not a logical route of concern, because the drum was apparently found on a saltwater beach where contiguous ground-water would be considered non-potable(Fig. 1)[1]. The direct contact and air exposure pathways are also unlikely considering that the drum was removed approximately 2 years prior to the present report[1]. During this period, the collective actions of currents, tides and weathering would likely disperse potential contaminants well beyond the general vicinity of the site.

Potentially Affected Population and Resources. No endangered or threatened aquatic species inhabit the waters off shore from Fort Walton Beach, although coral reefs and sea-grass beds are documented within Choctawhatchee Bay(Fig. 1)[3]. High salinities prevail on the eastern border of Ft. Walton Beach and throughout the western portion of the bay; however, estuarine conditions are documented toward the southwest of Ft. Walton Beach, along the inter-coastal waterway[3]. The area of the bay that borders Ft. Walton Beach is used by the public for swimming, boating and fishing[4].

Recommendations and Justification. Surface water appears to be the only pathway potentially affected a beached drum that was discovered at the site. Although the contents of the drum are not known, the volume of the drum is considered minimal[1]. Also, considering that the drum was removed approximately 2 years prior to the present report[1], any of the drum contents that might have remained would logically have been widely dispersed and diluted by the present time. In accordance with these observations and reasoning, the site warrants a no further action priority for a CERCLA site investigation. Alternatively, a request for additional information on this site has been forwarded to the Coast Guard[5]. If this request yields facts that will significantly affect the disposition of the site, a resumption of CERCLA involvement will be recommended.

Commander Skip Przelomski Commander (mep) 7th CG District 909 SE 1st Ave. Room 908 Brickel Plaza, Miami, FL 33131-3050

Dear Mr. Przelomski:

Below is a list of the USCG response sites for which I requested information in our phone conversation. Also enclosed is a copy of the EPA removal tracking log. This plus the name, address, date found in the CERCLIS is all the information that we have on these sites.

The basic information that we need is: Whether or not there was release of contaminants. Type and quantity of contaminants. Impact on the environment if known. Effectiveness of remediation. Disposal location.

As I told you we did receive the file from Tampa CG for the Hillsborough River Abandoned Drum site. The documents that were especially useful from that file were: Marine Pollution Incident Report, Source Supplement, Order For Supplies or Services, Event Tracking Log, Sample analyses, Disposal Destination Invoice. The Daily Accounting sheets and most invoices are not needed. This will hopefully save you some time and expense.

USCG Response Sites:

Gulf Breeze National Seashore FLD 984170332 Preliminary Assessment

Site Description. On 10/7/88, a moderately corroded 55-gal drum washed up near a fishing pier on the shore at Pensacola Beach, in Escambia County Florida. The drum was unmarked[1].

Description of Hazardous Conditions, Incidents and Permit Violations. The drum contents were sampled by an unidentified contractor and the drum was removed by the US Coast Guard on 10/7/88[1]. Results of the subsequent chemical analysis are not known.

RCRA Status. The site has no RCRA status.

Nature of Hazardous Materials. The results of the chemical analysis conducted at the time of the drum removal are not available.

Potential Routes of Contamination. Surface water is the only noteworthy route of contamination. Groundwater is not a logical route of concern, because the drum was found on a saltwater beach where contiguous groundwater would be considered non-potable. The direct contact and air pathways are unlikely routes of concern, because the drum was removed approximately 2 years prior to the present report[1].

Potentially Affected Population and Resources. The site is at or near the Gulf Islands National Seashore on Santa Rosa Island. Recreational fishing is evidently conducted from a nearby pier[1] and the national seashore provides public swimming beaches[5]. No federally-designated endangered or threatened species are known within 4 downstream miles of the site; however, the Cuban snowy plover(Charadrius alexandrinus tenuirostris)--a state-designated threatened species-- maintains a breeding area in the general vicinity of the site[1,2,3,4]. Potable intakes are improbable along contiguous waters because of the full salinities associated with the Gulf of Mexico[2].

Recommendations and Justification. Despite the lack of information concerning the chemical identity of the drum contents, the total volume of materials represented by the drum is minimal. Also the potential routes of concern appear to be limited to the surface waters along Pensacola Beach(Fig. 1). Consequently, on-site conditions would not have warranted NPL consideration, even at the time that the drum was removed. Furthermore, any future efforts to remediate on-site conditions could not reasonably yield significant changes in the disposition of the site because of the time elapsed(2 years) since the discovery and removal of the drum. Therefore, a no further action priority for a CERCLA site inspection is recommended.
